Customs

As was the custom in ancient Ireland poets or bards composed works to highlight the hospitably or nobility of the hieftains. Those reports would have enhanced the reputation of the ruling chiefs. The result of a bard’s contribution would then have been reflected on. If the result was positive the reputation of the chieftain would be enhanced in the eyes of people through the public reading of the poem or verse. [xxv]

One specific poem by Bard Tadhg Dall Ó ‘hÚiginn referenced his visit to Cormac Ó ‘Hara of the O ‘Hara Bui’ clan that was received with extremely favourable hospitality. He praised the chief’s clan members in battle, their genealogy & lineage. [xxvi]

Within Connacht another branch of the O ‘Hara Rua became extremely angered at Tadhg Dall Ó ‘hÚiginn successes. (previously they had been in contention with him in a matter of a Land Title):

Retaliation

O ‘Hara Rua Clan perceived the success of Tadhg Dall Ó ‘hÚiginn as another insult. They decided to retaliate. One night (while he was absent from home) six members O ‘Hara Rua broke into his house, they stole food & drink. [xxvii]

Later the clan feared that Tadhg Dall Ó ‘hÚiginn would recall or report on their activities. Tadhg Dall Ó ‘hÚiginn did produce a poem with the result that the O ‘Hara Rua became a laughing - stock throughout the country. Tadhg Dall Ó ‘hÚiginn’s sharp tongue cost him his life at Banada Friary one Sunday afternoon during 1591. [xxviii]

Unfortunately his satirical poem that referred to the six robbers of the Ó ‘Eadhra family of Cashel Carragh, Kilmacteige led to a disastrous conclusion. [xxix]

Ambush

Several members of the O ‘Hara Rua family ambushed Tadhg Dall Ó ‘hÚiginn. He managed to escape: he fled to the nearby priory where he requested Protection of God’s House. As the prior was a member of O Hara Rua Clan he refused Tadhg Dall Ó ‘hÚiginn’s request. [xxx]

Demise

The ambush resulted in the horrifying demise of the poet at just forty – one years of age on 31st March 1591. (The death of his wife & child were ordered at the same time) [xxxi]

According to legend Tadhg was murdered in Banada Co.Sligo at the Corpus Christi Friary (on a Sunday afternoon of March 1591) by members of the Ó hEadhra Rua clan:

Tributes

Daniel William Tiomna Nuadh praised Tadhg Dall Ó ‘hÚiginn’s contribution in the opening pages of his translation into Irish of The New Testament. He said that he had relied on him to proof - read his work prior to printing. Seaán Ó Cearnaigh trial - printed a broadsheet during 1571 that contained a poem re. Judgement Day by the fifteenth century poet Pilip ‘Bocht’ Ó ‘hÚiginn. [\[xxxviii\]](#)

Tadhg Dall Ó ‘hÚiginn was a signatory to the 1585 Composition of Connaught that sought to extend the Elizabethan Government’s hold over the West of Ireland. (Marsh’s Library) Modern History (1500 -1700) features issues (Sept – Oct 2012) vol 20. [\[xxxix\]](#)

Knott Eleanor penned that ‘He shows in most of his poems a calm acceptance of the contemporary strife as though it were the natural order. Poetry flourished on it, & for him, like most bardic poets, the profession was the thing. The apprehension & sorrows which troubled Irish Poets of a slightly later period did not affect Tadhg Dall. Shadows palpable enough to us in his own poems, portended no disaster to him. We may take him as a typical figure, the roughly adapted in mind & customs to the existing order: utterly unaware of the imminent dawn of a new world.’ Quoted may be viewed in MacCana’s Prionsias’s 1984 Early Irish Ideology & the Life Concept of Unity, The Irish Mind (ed. Richard Kearney) vol 1 (Dable Wolfhound Press) (page 76) [\[xl\]](#)

Tadhg Dall Ó ‘hÚiginn was described as ‘The Chief Teacher of the Poets of Ireland & Scotland.’ [\[xli\]](#)
